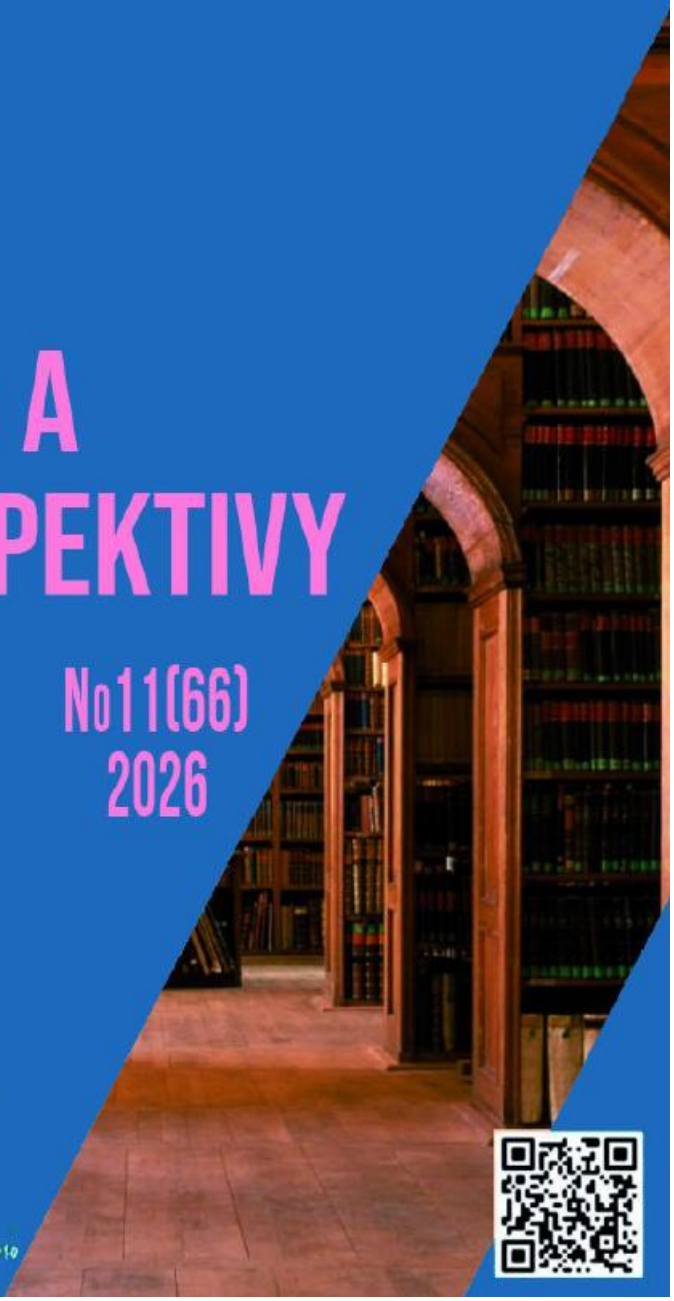
ISSN 2695-1584 (Print)
ISSN 2695-1592 (Online)
DOI:10.52058/2708-7530-2026-11(66)

VĚDA A PERSPEKTIVY

No11(66)
2026



Ми з Україною

ISSN 2695-1584 (Print)
ISSN 2695-1592 (Online)
DOI: https://doi.org/10.52058/2695-1592-2026-11(66)

Věda a perspektivy

№ 11(66) 2026

Praha, České republika
2026

Věda a perspektivy № 11(66) 2026
ISSN 2695-1584 (Print)
ISSN 2695-1592 (Online)

OBSAH

SÉRIE "Pedagogika"

Svitlana Kachmarchyk 22
FORMATION OF BILINGUAL PROFESSIONAL COMMUNICATIVE COMPETENCE OF FUTURE TECHNICAL SPECIALISTS IN HIGHER EDUCATION INSTITUTIONS

Kseniia Kugai 32
PERSONALISING ENGLISH LANGUAGE LEARNING THROUGH PROFESSION-ORIENTED TASKS FOR IT STUDENTS

Iryna Kulish, Iryna Nekoz 43
INNOVATIVE STRATEGIES OF TEACHING ENGLISH FOR OCCUPATIONAL PURPOSES

Nataliia Olendra 52
THE EVOLUTION OF ENGLISH TEACHING DURING WARTIME: FROM SURVIVAL TO INNOVATION

Nataliia Vozchykova 63
SPEECH AND LANGUAGE INTERVENTION FOR PRESCHOOL CHILDREN IN WARTIME: ADDRESSING STRESS AND TRAUMATIC EXPERIENCES

Ірина Бондаренко, Олег Бондаренко 73
ЗАКОРДОННИЙ ДОСВІД ОРГАНІЗАЦІЇ ФІЗИЧНОГО ВИХОВАННЯ В ЗАКЛАДАХ ОСВІТИ

Світлана Васильєва 89
ЗОВНІШНІ ТА ВНУТРІШІ ДЕТЕРМІНАНТИ ФОРМУВАННЯ ПРОФЕСІЙНИХ ЖИТТЄВИХ ОРІЄНТАЦІЙ ДІТЕЙ ТА МОЛОДІ В УМОВАХ ПОГРАНИЧЧЯ УКРАЇНИ

Світлана Васильєва 99
ЦИФРОВА ТЕХНОЛОГІЯ У ПРОЦЕСІ ВИХОВАННЯ ДІТЕЙ СТАРШОГО ДОШКІЛЬНОГО ВІКУ

Multidisciplinární mezinárodní vědecký magazín "Věda a perspektivy" je registrován v České republice. Státní registrační číslo u Ministerstva kultury ČR: E 24142. № 11(66) 2026. str. 1675

Zveřejněnorozhodnutímakademické radyMezinárodní Ekonomický Institut s.r.o. (Protokol №244/2026, 23.11.2026)

Vydavatel:
Mezinárodní Ekonomický Institut s.r.o. , Česká republika
International Economic Institute s.r.o. Praha, České republika se sídlem V Lázních 688, Jesenice 252 42
IČO 03562671 Praha, České republika
zastoupen Mgr. Markétou Pavlovou

Časopis vychází v rámci práce vydavatelské skupiny „Scientific Perspectives" a s vědeckou podporou: veřejné organizace „Ukrainian Assembly of Doctors of Sciences in Public Administration",Institut filozofie a sociologie Ázerbájdžánu Národní akademie věd (Baku, Ázerbájdžán)

Časopis je zařazen do mezinárodní vědeometrické databáze Index Copernicus (IC), mezinárodního vyhledávače Google Scholar a do meziná rodní vědeometrické databáze Research Bible

Šéfredaktor:
Karel Nedbálek - doktor práv, docent (Zlín, Česká republika)

Zástupce šéfredaktora:
Markéta Pavlova - ředitel, Mezinárodní Ekonomický Institut (Praha, České republika)

Členové redakční rady:
Iryna Žukovová-kandidátka na vědu ve veřejné správě, docentka (Ukrajina)
Huseir Huseyn Achmedov - doktor pedagogických věd, profesor (Baku, Ázerbájdžán)
Ahmet Selcuk Akdemir - doktor věd, profesor, Malatya Turgut Ozal University (Turecko)
Savvas Mavridis - profesor, katedra marketingu a cestovního ruchu, International Hellenic University (Greece)
Jurij Kijkov - doktor informatiky, dr.h.c. v oblasti rozvoje vzdělávání (Česká republika)
Vladimír Bačišin - docent ekonomie (Slovensko)
Peter Oľvàth - docent práva (Slovensko)
Yevhen Romanenko - doktor věd ve veřejné správě, profesor, čitný právník Ukrajiny (Ukrajina)
Badri Getchbaya - doktor ekonomie, profesor, docent na Batumi State University. Shota Rustaveli (Gruzie)
Laila Achmetová - doktorka historických věd, profesorka politologie, profesorka UNESCO mezinárodní furnalistiky a médií na furnalistické fakultě Kazašské národní university (KazNU). al-Farabi (Kazachstán)
Oleksandr Nepomnyashy - doktor věd ve veřejné správě, kandidát ekonomických věd, profesor, řádný člen Vysoké školy stavební Ukrajiny (Ukrajina)
Michał Tomasz - doktor věd, docent katedry geografie regionálního rozvoje, University of Gdańsk (Polsko)
R. Ahmad Zaky El Islami - Assoc. Prof. Ph.D., Department of Science Education, Faculty of Teacher Training and Education, Universitas Sultan Ageng Tirtayasa (Indonesia)
Dr. Muthmainnah Muthmainnah - Lecturer at Universitas Al Asyariah Mandar Sulawesi Barat, Indonesia, Adjunct Professor at Department Education Manipal GlobalNxt University (Malaysia)
Saeed M. Ismail - PhD, Professor, Department of English, College of Natural Sciences and Humanities, Prince Sattam bin Abdulaziz University, Al-Kharj (Saudi Arabia)
Dr. Jane Gakeniya Njoroge - Professor, Kenyatta University, (Kenya)
Diana Ibarra Santacruz - Professor, University of Nariño, (Colombia)
Helda Alicia Hidalgo Dávila - Professor, University of Nariño, (Colombia)
Zeynalova Nigar Eldar kizi - Doctor of Pedagogical Sciences, Associate Professor, Director of the Center for Inclusive Education, Azerbaijan University of Languages (Azerbaijan)
Oleksiy Kolesnikov - zakladatel Elysium quest, Outlast quest, sítě klubů virtuální reality VR GO. Expert v oblasti imerzivních technologií, prezident Ukrajinské asociace Quest Room (Ukrajina)

Články jsou vyvěšeny v redakci autora. Za obsah a pravopis zaslaných materiálů odpovídají autoři

© Mezinárodní Ekonomicky Institut s.r.o. , Česká republika, 2026
© Vydavatelské skupiny „Scientific Perspectives", 2026
© autoři článků, 2026

Věda a perspektivy № 11(66) 2026
ISSN 2695-1584 (Print)
ISSN 2695-1592 (Online)

SÉRIE "Filologické vědy"

Nataliya Bezkrovna, Antonina Devitska 515
GENERATIVE ARTIFICIAL INTELLIGENCE AS A TOOL FOR DEVELOPING FOREIGN LANGUAGE COMMUNICATIVE COMPETENCE: AN APPLIED LINGUISTIC PERSPECTIVE

Yana Bzova, Antonina Devitska 529
STYLISTIC AND EMOTIVE CHALLENGES IN TRANSLATING THE NOVEL: AN ENGLISH - UKRAINIAN PERSPECTIVE

Andrii Havrosh, Antonina Devitska 543
ARTIFICIAL INTELLIGENCE AS A LINGUISTIC CO-AUTHOR OF ACADEMIC TEXT: TRANSFORMATION OF AUTHORSHIP AND LANGUAGE PRACTICES IN HIGHER EDUCATION

Andrii Kasatkin 555
PSYCHOANALYSIS OF POETIC AND DREAM IMAGERY

Oksana Khalabuzar 564
PHONETIC, LEXICAL, AND STYLISTIC FEATURES OF JEFFREY LINDSAY'S AUTHORIAL STYLE IN THE NOVEL "DARKLY DREAMING DEXTER"

Maryana Tomenchuk, Oleksandra Kovach 572
PECULIARITIES OF ENGLISH-LANGUAGE SONGS AND THE INFLUENCE OF SONGWRITERS' PERSONALITY

Галина Косарєва 583
ОСОБЛИВОСТІ ХУДОЖНЬОГО ЧАСОПРОСТОРУ У РОМАНІ СТЕФАНА ХВІНА «ГАНЕМАН»

Наталія Рябокінь, Галина Терела 599
ВІД ДОКУМЕНТАЛЬНОГО ДО ІНСТРУМЕНТАЛЬНОГО ПЕРЕКЛАДУ: ФУНКЦІОНАЛЬНИЙ СТАТУС УКРАЇНСЬКИХ ПЕРЕКЛАДІВ ACQUIS ЄС НА ШЛЯХУ УКРАЇНИ ДО ЧЛЕНСТВА В ЄВРОПЕЙСЬКОМУ СОЮЗІ

Ігор Чорний 613
YOUNG ADULT У СУЧАСНІЙ УКРАЇНСЬКІЙ ПРОЗІ: ЖАНРОВІ МЕЖІ ТА ПОЕТИКА ДОРОСЛІШАННЯ

Věda a perspektivy № 11(66) 2026
ISSN 2695-1584 (Print)
ISSN 2695-1592 (Online)

https://doi.org/10.52058/2695-1592-2026-11(66)-564-571

Oksana Khalabuzar

Candidate of Pedagogical Sciences,
Associate Professor of the Department of Philology and Translation,
Kyiv National University of Technologies and Design,
Kyiv, Ukraine,
https://orcid.org/0000-0003-2338-0854

PHONETIC, LEXICAL, AND STYLISTIC FEATURES OF JEFFREY LINDSAY'S AUTHORIAL STYLE IN THE NOVEL "DARKLY DREAMING DEXTER"

Abstract. This article presents a comprehensive linguostylistic and cognitive-narratological analysis of the authorial style of contemporary American writer Jeffrey Lindsay, based on his psychological crime novel Darkly Dreaming Dexter (2004). The study focuses on the phenomenon of the morally ambivalent anti-hero, Dexter Morgan, who simultaneously serves as the narrator, a forensic expert, and a serial killer. The protagonist's dual nature creates a constant tension between the narrative intimacy of the first-person perspective and ethical distance, compelling the reader to balance between empathy and moral condemnation. The methodological framework of this research integrates insights from narratology (H. P. Abbott, G. Genette), rhetorical poetics (W. C. Booth, J. Phelan), the aesthetics of horror (N. Carroll), the theory of formulaic literature (J. G. Cawelti), as well as linguostylistics and cognitive stylistics (G. Leech, M. Short, P. Simpson, E. Semino). The analysis examines the phonetic, lexical, and syntactic devices employed to construct the character's fragmented consciousness. Particular attention is paid to Dexter's communicative strategies in his interactions with romantic partners, characterised by the substitution of genuine emotion with conscious imitation, verbal minimalism, the avoidance of intimacy, and an ironic dissonance between his spoken remarks and his cynical internal monologue. The study explores the role of the "Dark Passenger" metaphor in the manifestation of destructive impulses, the function of alliteration and rhythmic shifts, the combination of forensic terminology with dark humour, as well as the expressive potential of evaluative epithets, parallelism, inversion, parcellation, and gradation.

Keywords: authorial style, phonetic features of authorial style, phonostylistics, linguostylistics, psychological duality, anti-hero, internal monologue, syntactic parallelism, parcellation, inversion, gradation.

The problem's statement. Contemporary English-language literature has increasingly turned toward detective and crime prose, bringing critical attention to the morally ambivalent protagonist whose ethical complexity challenges conventional narrative models. Theoretical inquiries into horror and the aesthetics of dread—articulated by Noël Carroll, John G. Cawelti, Geoffrey Leech, and Mick Short—enable scholars to view personality as a hybrid construct merging repulsion with fascination and blurring the traditional boundaries between hero and criminal. Nevertheless, there remains a noticeable lack of research works devoted specifically to the phonetic, lexical, and stylistic features of Jeffrey Lindsay's authorial style as a prominent representative of modern literature not only in English-speaking countries but also abroad. Moreover, the numerous screen adaptations, fan-made videos, and fanfiction stories demonstrate the popularity of the novelist and his literary impact, making our research work particularly relevant and useful in the context of philological studies.

The analysis of the scientific works. Scholars of authorial style (John G. Cawelti, among others) formulated the theory of formulaic fiction, which can be traced in the chosen novel through its generic identity, demonstrating how popular literature absorbs established archetypes while simultaneously adapting them to shifting sociocultural expectations of the modern community. In his turn, James Phelan clarifies the ability of the ethical dimension of storytelling to rationalise and critique a character's conduct, awakening a deeply conflicted response from readers. From a linguistic perspective, the stylistic methodologies of Geoffrey Leech and Mick Short allow the text's verbal repertoire to be evaluated as an integrated network combining everyday register, forensic terminology, and sardonic commentary. Paul Simpson's stylistic framework further enables the interpretation of grammatical choices as direct reflections of cognitive operations and ideological positioning within the text. In our opinion, Dexter Morgan offers compelling material for analysis due to his embodiment of an exceptional literary phenomenon in which the central character simultaneously functions as the narrator and a serial killer, thereby generating persistent friction between narrative closeness and moral alienation. The primary objective of this research is to examine how stylistic mechanisms govern Dexter's communicative patterns—especially within his interpersonal exchanges with women—and how phonetic, lexical, and syntactic resources operate together to construct his fractured psyche.

Within current literary scholarship, we draw upon the narratological analysis established by Henry Porter Abbott, who conceptualises storytelling as a system involving continuous interaction among the author, the narrator, and the audience, while simultaneously clarifying the mechanics of first-person perspective in the novel. Concurrently, Wayne Clark Booth's rhetorical model facilitates the interpretation of literary communication as a subtle negotiation between the author and the reader; specifically, he highlights the issue of first-person narration by a morally ambiguous protagonist.

Accordingly, the main purpose of examining Lindsay's novel Darkly Dreaming Dexter (2004) is to analyse the author's literary style in the context of his phonetic, lexical, and stylistic choices.

Regarding stylistic choices, we would like to emphasise that, in our opinion, first-person narration is used by the author not merely as a structural device, but as a calculated strategy of intellectual and psychological impact. Lindsay offers readers unexpected entry into Dexter Morgan's consciousness—defined by forensic procedures, cold cynicism, and sociopathic distance—making readers deal with a deliberate suspension of ordinary moral judgement. As a result, we need to analyse the role of sharp humour and biting sarcasm, which serve as essential rhetorical instruments that provide the opportunity to maintain emotional insulation from his brutal crimes while rendering otherwise repulsive subject matter strangely engaging for the audience.

Besides, it is necessary to analyse the verbal patterns responsible for the novel's constant atmosphere of threat and methodical control. Thus, the author implements individual stylistic registers, including specialised forensic terminology, rhythmic modulation, pauses, graphon, and syntactic variations that contribute significantly to the psychological characterisation of Dexter. Our analysis reveals that lexical and grammatical choices are carefully combined with stylistic ones: the sharp alternation between elaborate, clinical sentences during Dexter's analytical reflections and clipped, fragmentary short sentences, simple vocabulary, and non-standard orthography during episodes of violence underlines the split behind his "Dark Passenger". Consequently, Lindsay's stylistic choices directly reinforce the psychological design of the narrative.

The novel opens with a striking graphon: "MOON. GLORIOUS MOON. FULL, FAT, REDDISH moon, the night as light as day, the moonlight flooding down across the land and bringing joy, joy, joy" (Lindsay, 2004, p. 2), encouraging the reader to imagine the atmosphere of the night and become drawn into the events. Graphon is also realised in the capitalisation of the "Dark Passenger"—the personified metaphor for Dexter's emotional emptiness and murderous intentions—which we consider a major stylistic innovation of the author. In our opinion, this stylistic choice heightens narrative tension and provides a seemingly rational framework for interpreting the anti-hero's behaviour. Lindsay converts an internal pathology into an autonomous force, a strategy that maintains narrative complexity throughout the novel as Dexter projects his violent drives outward.

There are several stylistic mechanisms devoted to the communication between Dexter and his romantic partners. Dexter's verbal communication with Rita is governed by conscious simulation, evidenced by his calculated remarks functioning as social performances. The protagonist openly mentions this artificial behaviour regularly, for example: "I don't understand love, but I can fake it" (Lindsay, 2004, p. 63). Another key device is the internal monologue that immediately follows interactions with romantic partners. Whenever Dexter utters a socially expected remark, his internal commentary subverts it with cold cynicism, generating dramatic irony and turning the reader into a silent witness and confidant. Seeking to avoid genuine social contact and emotional investment, Dexter consistently relies on verbal minimalism, producing brief, noncommittal replies such as "That's good" or "I see". Meanwhile, his private reflections reveal clinical objectification, captured in the detached observation: "Rita is a very neat little package of needs and expectations" (Lindsay, 2004, p. 75), which reduces intimate human bonds to predictable, mechanical measurements.

The trope of the "Dark Passenger" operates as a narrative mechanism that personifies violent intentions and disrupts moments that reveal the fundamental gap between Dexter's inner pathology and accepted social norms in romantic partnerships. When he notes, "My Dark Passenger stirred at the thought of closeness" (Lindsay, 2004, p. 82), this internal force actively interferes with emotional intimacy. Throughout the novel, the entity repeatedly appears as an independent presence that "sits inside me and waits", signalling a deep division between conscious behaviour and internal impulse. Dexter characterises it as "a shadow that never leaves me alone", which conveys its inescapable weight, and notes that "it whispers when I am calm", highlighting its constant influence on his mental processes. In moments of escalating compulsion, it becomes "a force that pushes me toward action" and "the silent watcher" (p. 2), acting as an active trigger for violence rather than a passive mood. Conversely, Dexter also describes it as "something I have to keep locked away" and "the part of me that does not belong in normal life", which emphasises both his effort to contain destructive thoughts and his permanent inner conflict with ordinary society. To reinforce this distance, he routinely adopts emotional evasion, reflected in his remark: "Feelings are complicated things, best left alone" (Lindsay, 2004, p. 91).

The novel also relies heavily on epithets that are predominantly evaluative and psychological, forming a bleak, tightly regulated, and emotionally barren fictional atmosphere. Dexter conceptualises his daily routine through a pursuit of "icy-clean control" (Lindsay, 2004, p. 6), in which authentic feeling is replaced by calculated mimicry, while his consciousness inhabits a dark and silent mental space detached from shared human experience. In public, he relies on a carefully constructed social mask to conceal his true nature, treating his own cognition as a mechanical emotional system opposed to innate empathy. In contrast, the surrounding community appears as a strange and incomprehensible environment that reinforces his existential isolation, whereas the "Dark Passenger" looms as "the cold quiet thing" (p. 2) and a constant, oppressive presence. Taken together, these attributive constructions establish a cohesive semantic field centred on emotional void, self-regulation, and estrangement.

Another prominent device in Lindsay's prose is syntactic parallelism, which mirrors Dexter's rigid self-discipline and methodical habits. Rather than sounding spontaneous, his inner reasoning frequently relies on balanced, tripartite structures that emphasise control and precision. For instance, describing his preparation before a murder, he notes: "And so I was always careful. Always tidy. Always prepared ahead of time so it would be right" (Lindsay, 2004, p. 3). A similar triadic rhythm recurs when he recalls his foster father's rules: "Always be sure, be careful, be exact" (Lindsay, 2004, p. 3), as well as in his perception of the victim's compliance: "no tricks, no hesitations" (Lindsay, 2004, p. 4). Even his sense of internal duality is framed through parallel opposition, as when he describes the Dark Passenger as "The me that was not-me, the thing that mocked and laughed and came calling with its hunger" (Lindsay, 2004, p. 2). Through these symmetrical patterns, the syntax reflects a mind that organises both violence and everyday existence into strict, predictable sequences.

In addition to parallelism, Lindsay combines lexical repetition, antithesis, and syntactic fragmentation to build psychological tension. Repeated keywords—such as Need, Luck, right, and seven (e.g., "Seven small bodies, seven extra-dirty orphan children… Seven straight lines pointing straight across the room", p. 6)—create an obsessive, almost hypnotic cadence. Antithesis, meanwhile, highlights the contrast between Dexter's polite social exterior and his ruthless inner nature, as seen in the juxtaposition between his "happy little life" (p. 3) and his "secret self" (p. 5). Since grammatical structure in cognitive stylistics is viewed as a direct reflection of how a character processes reality, three specific syntactic devices—inversion, parcellation, and gradation—deserve closer attention in analysing Dexter's mental state.

Inversion appears in Dexter's interior monologue when he foregrounds an emotional state, a place, or a compulsive urge by departing from standard English word order. By placing adverbials, objects, or prepositional phrases in initial position, the narrative disrupts smooth syntactic flow and highlights psychological tension. For instance, in "And that three weeks I had spent fighting the pressure" (Lindsay, 2004, p. 2), fronting the temporal object emphasises the prolonged strain of restraining his murderous impulse. A similar shift occurs in "Up the five battered steps, across the narrow porch to the front door, pushed shut" (p. 5), where fronted directional phrases slow the pace and focus attention on the physical threshold of the crime scene, as well as in "All for the kids. Everything he did, it was all for the kids" (p. 3), where topicalisation sharpens Dexter's bitter irony toward his victim. Rather than serving as mere stylistic decoration, these inverted structures mirror a mind that constantly reorganises experience around control and calculated observation.

Parcellation is one of the most distinctive syntactic features of the novel, particularly during moments of heightened alertness, waiting, or violent execution. By breaking a continuous thought into short, isolated fragments, Lindsay mimics rapid perception and emotional detachment. During tense pauses before an attack, Dexter's thoughts contract into abrupt, elliptical units: "Not yet" (p. 3), "Now" (p. 3), "Gone" (p. 3), and "Luck. Luck again" (p. 3). The same staccato rhythm governs his self-instructions and commands: "Always be sure, be careful, be exact" (p. 3) or "Open them. Open your eyes. Open them NOW. Look" (p. 6). Even his moral justification of murder is compressed into stripped-down fragments: "Not just for me. Not just for the Dark Passenger. For him" (p. 6). Through parcellation, complex reactions are reduced to crisp, disconnected impulses.

Gradation, by contrast, builds tension through step-by-step accumulation, moving from initial sensation to overwhelming compulsion or decisive action. The rising force of Dexter's urge is traced in the sequence "The Need had been prickling and teasing and prodding at me to find one, find the next, find this priest" (p. 2), where both verbs and infinitive phrases escalate toward a specific target. A comparable buildup marks the inevitability of the murder itself: "This night it would happen, had to happen. Just as it had happened before. Just as it would happen again, and again" (p. 3). On the physical level, escalating violence is conveyed through "I yanked hard on the noose, harder than he thought he could live through, harder than he knew could happen to him" (p. 5), while emotional progression moves from recognition to insight in "And he saw. And he knew how important it was for him to be just right. He began to know" (p. 5). In each case, gradation captures the steady intensification of psychological pressure until release becomes unavoidable.

Although Darkly Dreaming Dexter is a work of written prose, sound organisation plays a noticeable role in shaping the rhythm of Dexter's inner voice. His unspoken reflections frequently rely on alliteration and consonance, producing a tight, deliberate cadence that reflects his obsessive self-control. A vivid example occurs when he describes his rising murderous urge as "very careful cold coiled creeping crackly cocked and ready" (Lindsay, 2004, p. 2), where the rapid repetition of the voiceless velar plosive /k/ creates a tense, almost mechanical acoustic buildup. Similarly, in the triadic phrase "dark, deliberate, and deadly" (Lindsay, 2004, p. 34), plosive alliteration links calculation and lethality on the sound level.

Prosodic rhythm also shifts in accordance with Dexter's psychological state. During calm analytical reflection, his thoughts unfold in longer, measured periods, whereas moments of acute tension or imminent violence break into sharp, staccato beats, reinforced by typographical capitalisation such as "NOW" (p. 4) or "Open them NOW" (p. 6). Repeated acoustic motifs—especially the recurring phrase "Dark Passenger" and the insistent repetition of "joy, joy, joy" (p. 2)—embed his internal fixation directly into the sound texture of the narrative.

On the lexical level, Dexter's idiolect combines specialised forensic terminology with emotionally detached, everyday phrasing. Because of his work as a blood-spatter analyst, his observations of crime scenes and human behaviour regularly draw on criminalistics and procedural precision, which helps him maintain clinical distance from suffering and violence. Rather than describing events in emotional terms, he reduces human reactions to neat, manageable categories, as when he summarises his girlfriend as "a very neat little package of needs and expectations" (Lindsay, 2004, p. 75).

Another prominent lexical layer consists of metaphors of emptiness, shadow, and coldness that convey Dexter's inability to feel conventional human empathy. He explicitly refers to "the empty place inside me" (Lindsay, 2004, p. 52) and characterises his inner urge as "the cold quiet thing" (p. 2) and "the silent watcher" (p. 2). Alongside this imagery, gallows humour allows him to reframe disturbing situations through dry, detached irony—for instance, when he remarks, "Normal people are so strange about love" (Lindsay, 2004, p. 68), or casually refers to his double life as "my happy little life" (p. 3). The contrast between grim subject matter and understated, ironic wording creates an unsettling tone that draws the reader into Dexter's perspective.

At the macro-syntactic level, sentence structure across the novel mirrors Dexter's divided identity. His private reflections often take the form of extended, multi-clause sentences with subordinate qualifications, reflecting continuous self-monitoring and analytical calculation. By contrast, his spoken contributions in everyday conversation—especially in domestic exchanges with Rita—are deliberately brief and uncomplicated, relying on minimal replies such as "That's good" or "I see" to maintain an appearance of ordinary emotional responsiveness without genuine involvement.

When narrative tension peaks or violence occurs, this syntactic balance breaks down into elliptical, rapid-fire fragments. Utterances like "No hesitation. No doubt. Just action." (Lindsay, 2004, p. 110) or "One quick, slippery, pretty twist" (p. 4) strip away conjunctions and verbs to convey immediate physical execution. Taken together, the contrast between complex hypotaxis in inner reflection, conversational minimalism in dialogue, and abrupt parataxis in moments of action dramatises the split between Dexter's concealed inner world and his public persona.

Conclusion

The conducted analysis shows that the stylistic organisation of Jeffrey Lindsay's Darkly Dreaming Dexter is closely tied to the psychological portrayal of its protagonist. In his interactions with romantic partners, Dexter Morgan relies on conscious imitation of normal emotional behaviour, which is realised through verbal minimalism, emotional avoidance, and a sharp contrast between polite dialogue and cynical interior monologue. At the same time, the combination of phonetic devices (alliteration, consonance, and rhythmic shifts), specialised forensic vocabulary, gallows humour, and graphon—most notably the capitalisation of the "Dark Passenger"—constructs a persuasive linguistic model of a divided consciousness.

Furthermore, Lindsay uses syntactic contrast as a direct reflection of the narrator's mental state: extended, analytical constructions dominate Dexter's calm reflections, whereas inversion, parcellation, and gradation heighten tension and convey the immediacy of violent action. By pairing a detached, technically precise register with the intimacy of first-person narration, the author creates an unsettling balance between dark irony and psychological suspense, inviting the reader to examine the moral ambiguity of an unconventional anti-hero.

References

1. Abbott, H. P. (2008). The Cambridge introduction to narrative (2nd ed.). Cambridge University Press.

2. Booth, W. C. (1983). The rhetoric of fiction (2nd ed.). University of Chicago Press.

3. Carroll, N. (2004). The philosophy of horror, or, paradoxes of the heart. Routledge.

4. Cawelti, J. G. (1976). Adventure, mystery, and romance: Formula stories as art and popular culture. University of Chicago Press.

5. Genette, G. (1980). Narrative discourse: An essay in method (J. E. Lewin, Trans.). Cornell University Press.

6. Khalabuzar, O. A. (2025a). Exploring the phonetic and stylistic elements of Donald Trump's political rhetoric. Вісник науки та освіти (Серія «Філологія»), 7(37), 42–53. https://doi.org/10.52058/2786-6165-2025-7(37)-42-52

7. Khalabuzar, O. A. (2025b). Phonetic features of speech as a character-creative device (based on the material of the speech analysis of the characters of the "Lord of the Rings" trilogy). Вісник науки та освіти (Серія «Філологія»), 12(42), 36–52. https://doi.org/10.52058/2786-6165-2025-12(42)-36-52

8. Leech, G., & Short, M. (2007). Style in fiction: A linguistic introduction to English fictional prose (2nd ed.). Pearson Longman.

9. Lindsay, J. (2004). Darkly dreaming Dexter. Vintage Books.

10. Phelan, J. (2005). Living to tell about it: A rhetoric and ethics of character narration. Cornell University Press.

11. Semino, E. (2008). Metaphor in discourse. Cambridge University Press.

12. Simpson, P. (2004). Stylistics: A resource book for students. Routledge.